What do you see when you look in the mirror? Imperfections that need working on? Perhaps some things that you wish weren't there?

For 4'10", 65lb Jaim Connor, who was born with Russell-Silver Syndrome, looking in the mirror used to cause some depression. And it's understandable considering every time he did he saw a painfully pint-sized boy staring back at him.

But Jaim no longer avoids mirrors. Because even though all the world will look at Jaim and see an unusually small boy, that is not what he sees at all.
