1100 Bucks

“I’m going to go pick up the kids,” my wife said with her shoulders slumping. She had just brought me downstairs to give me the bad news: she had added up all the numbers and found that we were woefully short for the month: $1100.

I watched her walk out of the house under grey skies and an umbrella and felt like it was raining on my life. For so long now we had been trying to fight off this day, hoping and praying that God would give me a job, but months had gone by and God seemed painfully silent. We had been part of God’s economy for so many years, always tithing from whatever money we made, and it seemed like God wasn’t getting our checks. If He had promised to take care of us, how did being 1100 bucks down make any sense?

And so, I threw a fit. I’m not proud of it. But that is what I did. I walked around in a circle and threw my fists and elbows. When my wife came home, the sniffles she had weren’t because she got caught in the rain. “You’re not going to believe what just happened,” she said.

“Oh no,” I said. “What now—”

The lady in front of her in the line to pick up kids backed up her SUV by mistake and crunched the front of...
