

BY MIKE DIGGS WITH DAVE FRANCO

WHEN GOD CALLED A COP

Officer Mike fractures his right hand.
It’s one of the greatest moments of his life.

Officer Mike Diggs is outside a ramshackle apartment building sitting in a confiscated jalopy assigned to him as a supervisor of an undercover unit in Montgomery County, Maryland. After piecing together all the evidence about who it was that had robbed 22 banks in the recent months in Washington D.C., Maryland and Virginia, the PD knows where this guy is likely to go and where he is not. And so Mike places his teams around town at the hotspots. He loves his job and part of the joy is watching his team get the accolades that come with making the big catch. Besides, this guy has taken a lot of cash and scared a lot of people, walking into banks with a baseball cap and sunglasses and pointing the barrel of his gun at lots of innocent folks. He’s a guy Mike and his team are itching to take down.

But the thief makes one critical mistake. The last bank he holds up, he points a gun at a woman who happened to go to high school with him. With her help, the police have a ton of intel on him now. His days are numbered.

So Mike gets comfortable on the seats of his confiscated PD-issued car outside the suspect’s apartment—the last place they expect to see him, and keeps watch. He is excited for his team. Today could be the day...
