

FROM ROCK CHURCH OUTREACH DEPARTMENT

PROTESTING HATE

Rock community service projects make a bold statement

A small town in the countryside of Bosnia had avoided being involved in any direct fighting throughout most of the Bosnian war, but all that was about to change.

One evening, the night sky overhead lit up as shelling between the distant warring sides went back and forth, rattling the townspeople’s homes until about 3 a.m., when a bomb landed right on the outskirts of their village, violently quaking the ground and scaring everybody half to death.

The next morning, all the villagers rose with the dawn and walked out toward the blast. They gathered at the edge of the giant crater as everyone from the town came to see the devastation and imagine what would have happened were it to have landed 200 yards in the opposite direction.

As everyone looked, one senior man turned and walked back toward town by himself. He went inside his home, to the corner of his room where he kept his cello in a case.
