

FEATURED STORY

BY CYNDIE PATRICK WITH DAVE FRANCO

BIGGER THINGS

A woman who wonders if she'll be a mom gets confirmation from an unlikely source.

I was sitting in the middle of a circle of my friends who had gathered at my request to pray for me. It had been three long, agonizing years since my husband, Wayne, and I began trying to have a child, and as anybody will tell you who has had to navigate through the fear of not being able to conceive, it is a heavy, tortuous burden. Between the two of us, we had been tested in every way a man and a woman can be tested. The result was always the same. We had two very healthy bodies.

"Lord, open Cyndie's womb," they prayed one after another for 45 minutes. When the final amen had been spoken, our host excused herself and walked down the hall to her kitchen to retrieve something for us to drink. We were going to need it. We were exhausted.

"While we were praying," my friend said, "I could see you holding a baby girl." Of course, my heart skipped a beat.

"You're kidding?" my cousin said. "I got a very sharp image of you holding a baby boy☑"
